ThompsonMcMullan's elder law practice encompasses all aspects of planning for and representing elderly and disabled clients. They provide counsel and seasoned representation in guardianship and conservatorship proceedings. Services include estate planning for incapacity and long-term care, the appointment of guardians and conservators for incapacitated adults, administration of decedent's estates, nursing home resident's rights, representation of small businesses, and individuals in state tax matters, and representation of nursing home administrators before health regulatory boards.

Attorneys offer lectures to non-profit groups and organizations, health care professionals, and the general public on estate planning, rights of nursing home residents, and legal concerns of frail elderly and disabled.
